whereas the vaccine did not prevent the development and transmission of COVID and, therefore, despite vaccination, containment measures for vaccinated persons continued, whereas it was also not known whether, during this phase 3 of research and clinical trials, the vaccines made vaccinated persons less likely to become ill than unvaccinated persons, because these data by COVID vaccination status were not and are still not officially accessible or even available because they are not collected, whereas, therefore, during this phase 3 of research and clinical trials, it was not possible to demonstrate that the vaccines enabled the development of less severe forms of disease than those affecting unvaccinated persons, and it remains essential in terms of epidemiological research to study these data in the light of this criterion of the COVID vaccination status of patients,
